As Americans embark on a season of commemorations marking some of the most important events in our history, today's workshop aims to lay the foundations for an enduring collaboration between teachers, curriculum experts, heritage and cultural workers, archivists, web developers, and research historians. Further events are planned. For regular updates visit us at www.afterslavery.com.

Sponsors:
African American Studies Program, College of Charleston
After Slavery Project
Carolina Lowcountry and Atlantic World Program
Department of History, College of Charleston
The Humanities Council South Carolina
Queen’s University Belfast, Northern Ireland

Thanks to:
Citadel Oral History Program
Jubilee Project
LearnNC
Lowcountry Digital Library
Lowcountry Heritage Education
Magnolia Plantation
National History Day South Carolina
Palmetto History Program
Southern American Studies Association
South Carolina AFL-CIO

Workshop on Teaching the New History of Emancipation

a collaboration between high school educators, heritage and cultural workers, and research historians

College of Charleston
Charleston, South Carolina

Addlestone Library Rm. 227
Friday February 1, 2013
Professor Eric Foner

Eric Foner, DeWitt Clinton Professor of History at Columbia University, is one of this country’s most prominent historians. He is one of only two persons to serve as president of the Organization of American Historians, the American Historical Association, and the Society of American Historians. His most recent book, The Fiery Trial: Abraham Lincoln and American Slavery (2011) won the Pulitzer Prize for History, the Bancroft Prize and the Lincoln Prize.