Mission Statement

The mission of the Center for Creative Retirement (CCR) at the College of Charleston, founded in 1993, is to sponsor and support programs for its members who may be retired, semi-retired, or contemplating retirement, through continuing education and social opportunities. To further this mission, CCR will:

- Plan and conduct quality educational programs, which may be professionally or peer led, on topics of interest identified by members, so that each member may be inspired to investigate new fields as well as to pursue familiar territory and may creatively use talents and experience in sharing with others.

- Arrange for adequate space and administrative support for all of its programs.

- Conduct additional activities for social interaction and expanded cultural exposure for members.

- Interface with other organizations in the greater Charleston community.

- Identify additional educational, cultural, and service opportunities for its members.

- Actively recruit additional members by publicizing the aims and activities of the CCR within the community and through the media.

- Finance its programs and additional activities through adequate dues and fees in such a way as to provide the optimum programs and activities at the lowest feasible cost.
